

EDUCATORS WORKSHOP MAGAZINE

Marine Corps recruit training challenges young men and women over the course of 13 demanding weeks. From the moment they step onto the yellow footprints, recruits who thought and acted as youths are called to emerge as adults, able to be extremely disciplined and self-reliant.

During the week of June 16 - 20 educators from the Albuquerque and Denver areas were offered the unique opportunity to watch this sacred transformation take place. This book chronicles their week spent at Marine Corps Recruit Depot San Diego, Calif.

The Three Commitments

As much as service in the Marine Corps ensures the future of our nation, it also creates a better future for those who serve. To that end, the Marine Corps makes these commitments:

WE WILL MAKE MARINES.

WE WILL WIN OUR NATION'S BATTLES.

WE WILL DEVELOP QUALITY CITIZENS.

The Marine Corps is a family that takes care of its own in every single way. Whether a young man or woman stays in the Corps for a few years or an entire career, there is a vast network of Marines and former Marines ready to help him or her succeed in every possible way.

THE YELLOW FOOTPRINTS

Every Marine in the Corps will step on the same iconic yellow footprints as the many Marines who have served before them. As the recruits look around they know that not every recruit who stands next to them will be standing with them at graduation.

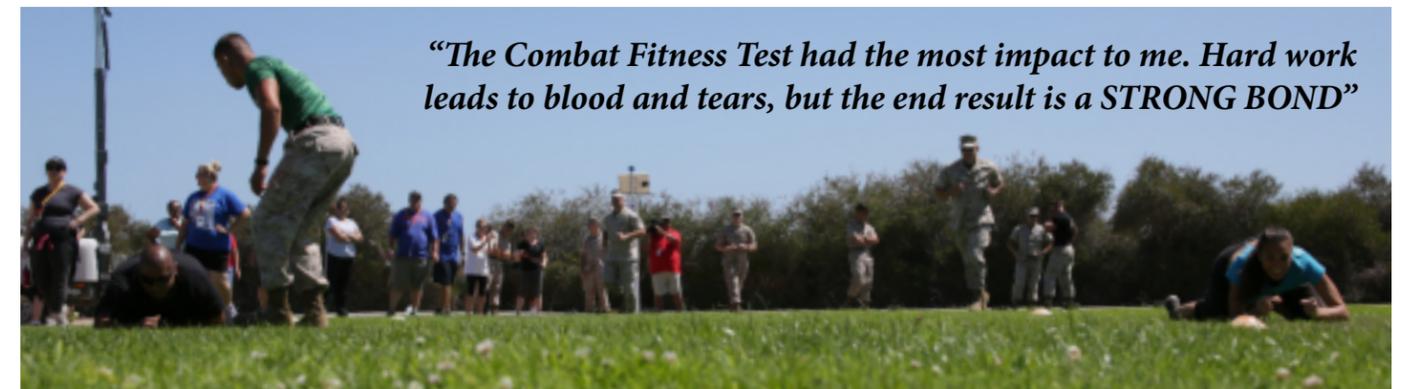

It all starts as a Drill Instructor explains the Uniform Code of Military Justice. Then, recruits are issued gear and must undergo a number of medical evaluations as well as perform the Initial Strength Test before they are ordered to report to the barracks and meet their permanent Drill Instructors for the first time.

"I enjoyed this week a lot. The Yellow Footprints demo was very cool and good to see. Its intensity is perfect because we get a very, very light taste of what recruits face."

COMBAT FITNESS TEST

Educators had a chance to test their physical fitness with the Marine Corps' Semi-annual Combat Fitness Test. This test consists of three different events designed to mimic the most common physical demands while on a combat deployment. The three portions are a half-mile sprint, ammo can lifts, and an obstacle course mimicking a casualty evacuation and ammunition resupply.

“Running the bayonet course with a very light load, and at much lower temperatures than a Marine really added to my respect and gratitude for our troops.”

“FIX BAYONETS”

On the bayonet assault course, recruits learn to attach and detach the bayonet from the rifle quickly and to engage targets aggressively. They become masters of offensive and defensive fighting techniques.

A DAY IN THE LIFE...

“One of the most surprising moments actually came from watching the drill instructor sitting and talking with all of his recruits on the floor around him. I had no idea that a drill instructor allowed himself to be viewed as a human.”

“BULL’S-EYE”

No matter what their Military Occupational Specialty is, every recruit must qualify with an M16 rifle after two weeks of dedicated marksmanship training. Recruits learn the basics of safety and Marine Corps marksmanship, and practice marksmanship principles before even touching a loaded weapon. They learn to fire from various positions at targets up to 500 meters away. On qualification day, recruits strive for a high score of 250 points on the Field Fire portion and the Known Distance course.

“I liked the range and wish we could have spent more time there. I had never held an M16 before. It gave me a new respect for the weapon and the people who control it.”

“We sucked at this. I’m glad I have trained Marines protecting our country.”

“12 STALLS”

The “12 Stalls” is an event during the “Crucible,” a final 54-hour test in which recruits will receive a maximum of four hours of sleep and minimal food

At each obstacle of the “12 Stalls” a team is provided a set of tools and instructions to complete each mission. Each mission must be accomplished within a certain time limit with minimal casualties.

At the completion of the Crucible, recruits are rewarded with an Eagle, Globe and Anchor emblem and the right to call themselves United States Marines.

AFTER HOURS

After each day of the workshop, educators had an opportunity to board one of the Holiday Inn's shuttles to some of San Diego's various hotspots such as Old Town, downtown, and the Historic Gaslamp Quarter. Shuttle rides to other spots were available upon request. The hotel also offered bicycle rentals as well as complimentary meal and drink vouchers to use at the hotel cafe and bar each day.
